When developing a hybrid, the goal is to combine the best features of the two originals. West Vancouver's Dundarave Fish Market has accomplished that... with style. Successfully combining a retail fish market and an award-winning neighbourhood restaurant, owner Kim VanSickle and chef Shaun Spooner start with a shared passion for bringing great seafood to their customers.

For fish and seafood, everything depends on freshness. At Dundarave Fish Market, the product sold at the market counter or served in the restaurant is never more than 24 hours from the water, including some of the freshest shellfish in the city. Customers can literally watch their choice from the market handed off to the chef for preparation for their table. What's more, market and restaurant working together under one roof ensures an unrivalled selection.

In the restaurant, thoughtful design results in an ambience one would never associate with a "fish market". Chef Shaun (nicknamed the "octo-chef" by some who have seen him in action) and his team serve a menu that showcases the fresh seafood from the market, complemented by a unique range of sauces – some made from scratch on site. Due to customer requests, the most popular sauces are now bottled for customers to take home and enjoy. The all-natural sauce line is called Simply West Coast. Just as the market provides the staples for the restaurant, customers can purchase the full selection of gourmet sauces in the market and enjoy the Dundarave dining experience at home. "Some customers," says Shaun, "come in just for the crab cakes." These will soon be a new addition to the Simply West Coast line of products.

Make the Dundarave Fish Market your local shop for the freshest seafood around at the market counter. Spend an evening savouring some of the octo-chef's delectable creations. Unwind at the end of the workday with some late afternoon specials at the oyster bar. You will quickly see what makes this one of West Vancouver's special places. ■
